YOURS FOR BARGAINS.

J. W. McMican

Forest Avenue, Great Bend.

THE MAID AND THE BURGLAR.

She was a maiden, coy but forty. Unsullied by a dream of man: No thought, however slightly naughty, Had ever crossed her life's short span. 'Till one dark night, when all were sleeping, She found the watch she long had sought, For underneath her bed lay peeping A poor lone burglar freshly caught. She locked the door and quickly turning Pulled forth a pistol fully cocked, And with a voice that told its meaning, Her prisoner's plight she sternly mocked. "Now listen to my ultimatum: You've got to marry me or die. Though you're the very lowest stratum, I'll have a husband, or know why." Then rose the burglar, sadly speaking: "Your proposition will not suit; Rather than be the man you're seeking, Why darn you madam, darn you, shoot!" --Iola Sentinel.

An Incident of Grant Day.

"At the request of of Hermann Oelrichs the bands in the parade stopped and all the drum music was hushed as they passed the house of Theodore A. Havemeyer, on Madison avenue, near Thirty-eighth street."

And why? Was it simply because to that great house, as to so many humbler ones, had come death's swift and irresistible visitation? Because the strange and sudden dignity of death had come upon a man who, however loved in his own circle, was by the many feared, hated and execrated? If so, why not like reverence paid to every household along the line of march into which the dread presence had recently come?

Or was it perhaps because of some great public service rendered by the organizer of the Sugar Trust--which enabled him to share in homage paid the memory of Grant? Was it because of his surpassing skill in affecting legislation for his own profit, or for his industry in suppressing competition and closing avenues of employment to thousands of workmen, or in recognition of the power, which in life he swayed relentlessly, to levy tribute on every family table?

Or was it merely that the man who lay dead had been a man of great wealth--merely a new manifestation of the spirit which some months ago made one of the chief thoroughfares of the city almost impassable with a covering of tankard because in an adjacent house a famous millionaire lay ill?--New York Journal.

Some people who attended the show Saturday from a distance were in the city two days and nights.
